THE ECONOMY OF THE FRENCH.
Mr. Joseph Medill, ex-mayor of Chicago, writing from Paris to the Tribune of the former city, speaks of the economy of the French. He says:

But that in which the French more particularly excel, is economy. Compared with these French people, the Americans are wasteful, improvident and extravagant. It seems to me they live on just about one-half what the Americans do. They have a knack, so to speak, of making a little go a great way, and of extracting subsistence or comfort from things Americans would throw away or never notice. It may be instructive to point out a few of the matters to which reference is here made. In the first place, not an ounce of food is wasted in harvesting or preparing for market. In the next place, not an ounce more of vegetables, fish, or fowl, goes into the pot or kettle, or is placed on the table. The wife of every French family knows to a nicety what quantity of each kind of food is the least that will suffice to make a comfortable meal, and not a particle more than that is cooked or served. There are no slop-buckets full of broken victuals left on the table after breakfast or dinner, to be thrown on the street or manure heap, or flung to the dogs or swine, as in America. No pieces of bread, or meat, or vegetables are thrown away; such quantities are not bought as to become stale or spoiled in the cellar or pantry. Servants are never permitted to waste or steal food for poor relations, as in America. The lady of the house looks after the marketing, her kitchen, and her pantry with sharp eyes and unflinching care. The economy in the consumption of fuel for cooking and house warming is immense as compared with that in our wasteful country. One reason, of course, is that wood and coal in France are scarce and dear. They cost at least double the price paid therefor in the United States; but the domestic consumption is not one quarter as much. Paris contains between four and five times the population of Chicago, but I find that the fuel consumed in it is less than in Chicago. It is true that the climate is much warmer for six months of the year in Paris than in Chicago; but, after making the due allowance for that, it still remains true that only one-third to two-fifths as much fuel is consumed per capita in Paris as in Chicago; and, as far as my observation and inquiries extend, the same proportion holds good throughout all France.

A CLEVER RUSE.—A Paris paper says: A gentleman was seated before the Cafe Riche, when a young artist passed with a companion. "I will bet you," said the artist to his friend, "I will drink that gentleman's coffee, and he will thank me for doing it."
"You are crazy."
"You will see."
"You know him, then."
"Come and see the proceeding for yourself."
Very solemnly they approached the gentleman. "Sir," said the artist, "I am an inspector of the Board of Health. If I ask for coffee they will give me without doubt a very good cup, for they know me. You, sir, whom they do not know, are served like the rest of the world. Will you permit me to taste your coffee?"
"Certainly," said the gentleman. "This is really good. The Government has great care over the people. The police cannot be too watchful over the public health."
The artist drank the coffee, and having finished it said politely, "They do things properly at this cafe; this is excellent coffee." He bowed, and left the gentleman to pay for the coffee he had not had, but profoundly grateful for the care of the Government.

AN AWKWARD AYOWAL.—A writer in Charivari says: The hurry of a young man to say "I will marry"—above all when he does not see what his interlocutor carries in hand—is sometimes exceedingly inconvenient. The other day a worthy citizen encountered, as he came out of a fancy store, a young man whom he had met at the bathing place a month before.
"Hold," he said to himself, "that is the young fellow whom we used always to meet on the shore, when I took a walk with Victorine."
"Don't you recollect me?"
"Heavens!" he exclaimed, turning deadly pale and seizing the old man's hands so that he could not slip, he added, "I am ready to marry her, sir."
"To marry her!" exclaimed the citizen in amazement.
"Yes, sir, I have done very wrong. I know it. But all can be repaired. What do you wish? I love her—love her like a fool."
"Victorine—
"Victorine!"
"Victorine! Malheureux! Why that is my wife."

ART DISCOVERIES.—Art discoveries have been rife in Paris of late, the most important (if authentic) one being that of a contemporaneous portrait of Jeanne d'Arc, painted by a Scotchman named Power. This invaluable picture was recently discovered in a garret among a number of old and worthless paintings belonging to an ancient but impoverished family. A committee of experts has been appointed to examine the portrait, and should they decide favorably as to its authenticity it will be purchased by the Government and will be placed in the Louvre. Another discovery was made by the workmen who were engaged in digging the foundations for the new Church of the Sacred Heart at Montmartre. It consisted of an oaken coffin, bound and clasped with iron, which contained an illuminated livre d'heures in manuscript in a perfect state of preservation. This precious relic is to be placed in the Musee de Cluay.

To young men the road up the hill may be hard, but at any rate it is open, and they who set stout hearts against a stiff hill shall climb it yet. If young men would deny themselves, work hard, and save in their early days, they need not keep their noses to the grindstone all their lives as many do. Let them be total abstemious for economy's sake; water is the strongest drink; it drives milk. Let the drink for lions and horses, and Samson never drink anything else. The beer money would soon build a house.—C. H. Spurgeon.
